

DAILY CONSTITUTION.

THE LARGEST CIRCULATION
CITY, COUNTY AND STATE.

DEFIES REPUTATION.

GENERAL TRAVELING AGENT:
T. M. AUTON.

ATLANTA.

Tuesday Morning, Feb. 9, 1875.

TO LAWYERS.—A full report of the case of the Supreme Court is to be added to The Constitution by the Reporter of the Court.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—We do not need anonymous letters and communications. The personal address of the writer are indispensable. Rejected communications we can not undertake either to return or receive.

Northway street cars are shedding their wheels and adoption runners.

SENATOR HARRIS declines all overtures to run for congress from his district.

On the eight-eighth count of Ohio, all but eight are interested by at least are interested by at least one railroad.

The only party Grant seems to have any apprehensions of now is "a party to have the name of the new movement to abolish those wicked rebels."

Congress stands by Benjamin F. Butler, and he is not afraid; but few men in this day would like to have said that they had received an audience from such a source.

The new King of Spain has kindly advised Senor Zorrilla, the leader of the radical Spanish politics, to take a trip abroad. Zorrilla will probably go.

CARPENTER is off the "aged" edge of "Despot," and that's what's the matter with Major Sooth Syrup and Baccocas DeCasseres and all his nerves, or he may go a-swinging with Zach, Chandler and Ben Butler.

The senate of Florida has passed the house concurrent resolution appointing a committee of five to investigate the validity of the $4,000,000 bonds issued to Littlefield for the further extension of the Jacksonville, Pensacola and Mobile railroad.

It seems General Emory is to be retired at his own request, and in active service for forty years. We are glad it was not for his just and proper cause in Louisiana. Emory is both major and brigadier general by brevet, but his true position in the army is colonel of the 5th cavalry. It is proposed to make him brigadier and retire him full pay.

At last John W. Forney throws some thing of light on the $25,000 Pacific Mail.

In a recent letter from Paris he says: "An unusually open and delightful visit to Paris, and a great pleasure and everybody happy. The continental excitement is increasing. France will do her duty, both to France and America. I do not know when I shall be at home."

The tropical oratory of Mr. Brown, of Kentucky, was out of taste, very likely, but it was not far from the truth. Butler's a great scamp. Everybody knows it; everybody out of doors says it. Butler does not know the trouble to do it, but we suppose it is unimportant to say it in Congress. Mr. Brown will, therefore, accept such a rebuke as is deserved for telling wholesome truth out of season. It is not a rebuke which need keep him awake at night. Butler's own performance was remarkably mild and proper.

—[New York World.]

Surry Laws.

It is unnecessary to argue at length the impolicy and wrong of usury laws. The argument from almost every conceivable stand-point has been already presented in The Constitution, editorially, in communications, and in selections from our contemporaries. As civilization has advanced, the injustice and folly of such laws have become more generally admitted, and the greatest thinkers have pronounced against them. Even as far back as 1832, we find in the Examiner of Philadelphia, a "Journal of political economy, and devoted to state rights and free trade," these sensible and sound views:

"Usury is the hire paid for a capital, as freight is the hire paid for a ship, or porters' hire for a hand truck, or (in道理) gets an equivalent in the use of the capital borrowed. Although money be the usual form in which capital is loaned, yet it is not the only form in which it is loaned; for property which is loaned, is loaned, and does not incur the trouble to do it, but we suppose it is unimportant to say it in Congress. Mr. Brown will, therefore, accept such a rebuke as is deserved for telling wholesome truth out of season. It is not a rebuke which need keep him awake at night. Butler's own performance was remarkably mild and proper.
